

A comparison of glue and a tube as an anastomotic agent to repair the divided buccal branch of the rat facial nerve.

Authors: Murray J.A.M., Willins M., Mountain R.E.

Publication Date: 1994

Abstract:

The best anastomotic agent to join nerve ends is controversial. This paper describe a controlled trial between a collagen tube wrap and a tissue glue to anastomose the rat facial nerve. There was no difference in the results using photographic, histological and electrophysiological techniques.